

Abstract of The Disclosure

For object-based coding of moving image sequences for video objects, signaling information indicating whether the video object is to be decoded for playback or displayed is always transmitted regardless of the external form of a video object.

In contrast with options available in the past, less data need be transmitted.